NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

1776.
In their ragged regimentals
Stood the old Continentals,
Yielding not.
When the grenadiers were lunging,
And like hail fell the plunging
Cannon shot;
When the files
Of the line
From the smoky night encampment,
Bore the banner of the rampart
Unicorn,
And grimmer, grimmer, grimmer,
Rolled the roll of the drummer,
Through the morn!
Then with eyes to the front all,
And with guns horizontal,
Stood our sires;
And the balls whistled deadly,
And the streams flashing redly
Blazed the fire;
As the roar
On the shore
Swept the strong battle-breakers
O'er the green sodden acres
Of the plain;
And louder, louder, louder,
Cracked the black gunpowder,
Cracking again!
Now like smiths at their forges
Worked the red St. George's Cannoniers;
And the "villainous saltpetre"
Rung a fierce, discordant metre
Round our ears;
As the swift
Storm drift,
With but-sweeping anger,
Came the horse-arms clangor
On our flanks,
Then higher, higher, higher,
Burned the old-fashioned fire
Through the ranks!
Then the old-fashioned colonel
Galloped through the white internal Powder-cloud;
And his broad sword was swinging,
And his brazen throat was ringing
Trumpet loud;
Then the blue
Bullets flew
And the trooper-jackets reddened
At the touch of the leaden
Ride breath.
And rounder, rounder, rounder,
Roared the iron six-pounder,
Hurting death!

A VISIT TO GARIBALDI.

Correspondence of the New York Tribune.
TURIN, June 22, 1861.
Just returned from Capri, I give you the assurance that Garibaldi, whom foreign papers described as sick, is in the best of health, full of hope for the cause of freedom, and ready to take part in the imminent struggle. I had the opportunity of conversing with him on political events, past, present, and future, and found him well informed as to all questions in the West as well as in the East, giving his clear and unbiassed judgment about men and events. In telling words, in which the cheerfulness and dignity of his character find a most happy expression. Mentioning America, he spoke with the greatest sympathy for the rights of the nation, but he could not conceal that, for the present moment, he takes the struggle to be a great political war, not a war of liberty, though the cause of freedom must ultimately be advanced by the victory of the Union, of which he has not the slightest doubt.
"I know the difficulties," he said, "which prevent the Federal Government, even now, from proclaiming the liberty of the slaves; but so long as the legal existence of slavery is acknowledged, the war remains a political war. Had it been otherwise, I would have offered my sword to those who are willing to put down that degrading institution, which I know sufficiently from experience in Brazil."
I expressed my opinion that he might probably soon find an occasion nearer home once more to wield his powerful sword for liberty.
"I hope so," said he, "and am fully aware that the cause of liberty is the same all over the world. I am ready, with my friends, to go to the assistance of any people fighting for freedom, as soon as I am called, for I do not wish to be an intruder. I go only where I know that I am welcome."
"And how do you desire to be called," asked I.
"There is but one way of calling me," he answered, "by the sound of muskets. However desperate may be the struggle, I will go to assist those who rise for liberty, whether in Greece or Hungary."
He spoke with deep feeling of Cavour's death, to whom he had but a few days before his illness written a long letter about the means whereby the unity of Italy is to be accomplished, protesting against foreign assistance. Italy is great and powerful enough to do the work herself. She does not require either the help or the permission of France to expel foreign oppressors. His opinion about the French Emperor remains the same as it was before the Italian war.
"Were he the genius his followers proclaim him," he said, "he would use the force and prestige of France to make a powerful alliance with England and Italy, to which Portugal, Greece, and Switzerland would at once, and Spain soon afterward, adhere, and force Austria to evacuate Venetia, and to establish the legal independence of Hungary. These principal causes of war once removed, he ought in concert with his allies to abolish the fleets and the system of standing armies, and make it possible that the enormous unproductive expenditure for warlike purposes and armaments should be employed for industrial and commercial enterprises, for the construction of railroads and canals, and for the education of the working classes. For the defence of the different countries the citizens themselves must suffice, as we see they do in Switzerland and in the United States."
Garibaldi is now patronizing the plan of some philanthropic English ladies, who are trying to establish infant asylums, ragged schools, and provident societies in Italy, especially at Naples and Palermo; he has written an appeal to the Italian ladies to enlist their co-operation in this noble scheme, not merely for the object itself, but to turn the attention of the Italian women to their duties to their country, since in Italy the customs of the people, the influence of the priests, the system of education under despotic governments, have circumscribed the sphere of woman still more than in England or America. The mothers of the present generation are mostly influenced by the priests; Garibaldi's own mother, of whom he spoke with the greatest veneration, was educated by nuns; still, when he saw her for the last time, at his return from the Roman expedition, she blessed him with the words, "You have done your duty, and he who does his duty does well."

Garibaldi's habits are regular and irreproachable. He rises with the sun. At four in the morning we saw him walking to an out-house, where he takes his cold ablutions; then he drinks a cup of milk and goes to his garden to hoe corn, beans, and potatoes; plant and water his vines and fruit trees, among which are chestnuts from Sicily, olives from Nice, fig trees from the Romagna, and a few orange trees sent as a present by the municipality of Sassari. At eight he takes coffee, and returns again to his garden, where he works as hard as any laborer. At noon comes his dinner hour, with the most simple fare, soup, meat, vegetables, and fruits, but no wine for himself. He remains with his friends in conversation after dinner, especially if he has lady visitors, to whom he extends the most refined politeness.

After dinner he reads his letters, of which he receives bags full every third day by the way of Sardinia. Carpeneto, his old friend and secretary, late consul at Tangiers, who, in 1849, gave him his hospitality for nine months, and lost his official position at that time for having sheltered the outlaw, writes a portion of his letters, but all the more important work he does himself. If worried or excited by political or private tidings, he silently returns to his garden, and dispels his annoyance by manual labor. At eight in the evening he takes tea with his friends, and soon afterward goes to bed, or reads Italian or English poetry.

From time to time he goes to Sardinia for a hunting excursion, or goes fishing on the sea. His sheep, cattle, and horses interest him much, and he likes to speak with the mariners of Maddalena and the shepherds, who often come from Sardinia to visit him. Every fortnight a steamer arrives direct from Genoa, bringing always a dozen or more of friends, companions and admirers to Capri; old carbonaro of 1821, competent actors of 1831, at that time young Italians, now gray men; his lieutenants from Montevideo; his friends from Lima, his companions of Rome, and his officers of the glorious Sicilian expedition, not to speak of party chiefs from Italy, Poland, Hungary, Germany, Greece, from the bulk of that invasion, which for three days is hospitably received at the hermitage of Capri. Some of them are lodged in the humble house of the hero, small and adorned with the simplest furniture, such as we meet in the houses of farmers. Those who cannot be lodged at Capri, go to the hotel of the neighboring island—Maddalena. They come in the morning to Capri, where Garibaldi receives them with the greatest cordiality; they dine with him, play the Italian game of ball, seek corals on the beach, accompany Garibaldi's son, Menotti, on his fishing expeditions, or work in the garden, and return at night to Maddalena. On the fourth day the steamer returns from Porto Torres, and carries them back to Genoa.

The active outdoor life of the hero, his neat habits, and the simplicity of his fare, together with his abstemiousness, keep him remarkably vigorous, and fit for any exertions. Political intrigues tire him out, and if he yields to his friends, and sometimes visits Turin and the Parliament, it is only to increase his disgust of politicians, who treat him, for fear of Napoleon, with an ingratitude scarcely to be credited. In order to prove that they are not revolutionists, even when they reap the fruits of revolution, these statesmen of Turin have proscribed the Garibaldian officers, and a recommendation from the conqueror of the Two Sicilies usually endangers the claims of his friends.

A REJECTED PROPOSAL FROM A WIDOWER.

A few months since a gentleman had the misfortune to lose his wife, a literary lady of some reputation. After grieving for a number of weeks, a bright idea entered the head of the widower. He thought that he could do something to lessen his sorrow, and for that purpose he called upon a lady of his acquaintance and requested to speak a word with her in private. Thinking that she was about to receive a proposal, the lady prepared to listen with becoming resignation.
"My dear," said he, with downcast eyes, as he took her hand, "you know my wife?"
"Certainly."
"It is not good for man to be alone?"
"Perhaps not."
"Did you ever reflect upon that part of the marriage service which requires couples to cleave unto each other until death do them part?"
"I have."
"I have often reflected upon it myself. Now death has parted me from my wife, and I feel very lonely."
"I should think it likely."
"I think I must do something to remind me of her kind consolations, and the memory of her virtues."
He pressed the lady's hand and sighed. She returned the pressure, and also suffered a sigh to escape her.
"My dear," he said, after a long pause, "I'll come to the point at once. I have a proposal to make."
She blushed and covered her face with her hand.
"Yes, I have concluded to write my wife's biography. Now, I have had but little skill in literary exercises, and if you will correct my manuscript, and write the headings of the chapters, I will give you five dollars."
"I'll see you hanged first, and then I won't, you—"
She left the room, being unable to express her feelings. The widower sighed, took his hat and went home. He has not yet published nor proposed. It was a pity to be so misunderstood.

FIRST UNDERGROUND RAILROAD.—"Hallo there, Sambo, where are you going this evening?"
"Why, why," says Sambo, scratching his head, "I'm going down to the depot."
"What depot?"
"To U. G. depot, massa."
"Where did you learn about U. G. R. R. and depots, you black rascal?"
"In de Bible, massa; de blessed Bible tell me all about it, massa."

Feeling anxious to know what new theory Sambo had found in the Bible, he goes on to interrogate him.
"The Bible don't tell anything about railroads, neither above nor below ground, you poor nigger."
"Yes, massa, de Bible tells where the first track of the U. G. R. R. was laid."
"Where was it?"
"In de Red Sea, massa."
"Who laid it?"
"De Lord Almighty himself."
"Well, Sambo," mellowing down a little, "who were the conductors of that road?"
"Who were the fugitives that run away?"
"De children of Israel, massa."
"Who were the slaveholders?"
"De Egyptians."
"Were they white or black?"
"Black man; dat-time de slave de white man, de slaveholder de black man; ha! ha! ha! massa."
"Did they pursue the slaves?"
"Yes, massa."
"Did they take them back to slavery?"
"No, massa; dey could n't catch 'em."
"Why not?"
"Because dey took de track up, ha! ha! ha! good, massa, was n't it?"
"Sambo, you may go down to your quarters."

EFFECTIVE RETALIATION.—A Quaker had a quarrelsome neighbor, whose cow, being unfed, used to go to large, often broke into the Quaker's well-cultivated garden. One morning, having driven the cow from his premises to her owner's house, he said to him:
"Friend T, I have driven thy cow home once more, and if I find her in my garden again—"
"Suppose you do?" his neighbor angrily exclaimed, "what will you do?"
"Why," said the Quaker, "I'll drive her home to thee again, friend T."
The cow never again troubled the Quaker.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO.'S REPRINT OF THE BRITISH REVIEWS AND BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., New York, Commence to publish the following leading British Periodicals, viz:
1. The London Quarterly, (Conservative.)
2. The Edinburgh Review, (Whig.)
3. The North British Review, (Free Church.)
4. The Westminster Review, (Liberal.)
5. Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, (Tory.)
These Periodicals ably represent the three great political parties of Great Britain—Whig, Tory, and Radical—but politics form only one feature of their character. As organs of the most profound writers on Science, Literature, Morality, and Religion, they stand, as they ever have stood, unrivaled in the world of letters, being considered indispensable to the scholar and the professional man, while to the intelligent reader of every class they furnish a more correct and satisfactory record of the current literature of the day, throughout the world, than can be possibly obtained from any other source.
